Cuts Arm Badly

Albert McKay had the misfortune to cut his arm badly Tuesday of this week. He was logging with Nick Nicholson and Charley Lynch, not far from the Santa Ana cannery, and while falling a tree, slipped from the springboard to the ground. As he did so his right arm came in contact with the saw, lacerating it severely. He was brought to town that evening, and had his hurts attended to by Dr. Shurick.

What Do You Think Of That

The Duickland was seen to approach the float recently. Her captain made her fast, then after a close look all around to see if anyone was in sight, he boarded her and disappeared into her house. A moment later he reappeared, took another careful view of his surroundings then stepped ashore with a load in his arms—a baby buggy. Just think of it, that confirmed old bachelor. A few weeks ago he was seen pricing ladies wearing apparel, and now he appears on the scene with a baby buggy. Now, what do you think of that?

Good Prices Continue

The market for fresh halibut continues good with the best prospects for the future. In fact the supply at the present time does not begin to equal the demand. It is expected however that when the spring salmon begins to arrive at the Sound in quantity, it will have a depressing effect upon the halibut, but until that happens, no one who wants to fish for halibut need be short of cash.

Kalkins Boat Is O. K.

The Kalkins, father and son, have just about finished re-building the big skiff they intend to use on the Stikine. The craft has been thoroughly strengthened, a twelve horse power Fox gasoline engine installed, and a house constructed. They have given the boat a trial trip, and are well satisfied with her action, and after a minor change or two will be ready for business. Their intention originally was to go up the river this fall, but the early freeze up of the past ten days will probably make that impossible.

A Good Picture Show

Everybody who was present last Thursday night at Redmen's hall was more than satisfied with the show the Shaw Moving Picture Co. presented. The pictures were new and interesting, and the light all that could be desired. After the show an informal dance was held.

An Early Freeze-up

Word reaches town from the mouth of the river that everything there is frozen up solid; probably the earliest on record, at least earlier than in recent years. This will put an end, in all probability, to the duck hunting for this year.

Firemen Have Organized

At their last meeting the Alert fire company perfected the organization of their company with the following officers, etc.:

Chief, J. D. Grant.
Foreman, Joe Ensley.
Nozzlemen, Leo McCormack, Nels Moen, Frederick Bronson, Alex Varette, and Dave Lewis.
Hydrant men, Harry Gartley and Dave Lewis.
Ground ladder, Nels Moen and John Kolb.
Roof ladder, J. M. Wheeler.
Axe man, Alex Varette.
Fire extinguishers, John Schuler and Ed. Linderman.

Trouble For Mt. Tabor

At Portland the federal grand jury is investigating the treatment of Alaska insane at the Mt. Tabor Asylum, following the charges made against that institution by Louis Targon, who is suing the institution for $25,000 for illegal detention. Secretary of the Interior Ballinger laid the complaint before Attorney General Wickersham and it was through the orders of the latter the investigation was begun.

Getting Ready For Business

The local sawmill is getting things in shape to resume operations early in the new year. The machinery is receiving a general overhauling, while the cylinder of the engine is being shipped down to Seattle to be re-bored. There is a rumor in circulation that manager Fred Willson landed a big order on his recent trip north, which if true, will mean the starting up of the mill probably two or three months earlier than this year. It is to be hoped that such is the case as the operation of the mill means much to every man in Wrangell.

Everybody On The Move

It looks as though almost everybody in Southeastern Alaska had made up their minds to take advantage of the cheap rates offered by the steamboat companies, making visits to friends which they been putting off for the past four or five years. The between-port business is three times over as great as it ever was before in the history of steamboating in this region.

THE HUMBOLDT FIGHT

Back of the rate cutting, according to the news which comes up to the Record in press dispatches this morning, is a fight on the Humboldt steamship company, inaugurated; so the Seattle advises aver, by the old line companies. If there was to be any rate cutting at all it is too bad it was not begun several months ago; then many could have availed themselves of trips to the fair. Just now rate cutting will do harm to the district. People who had intended to remain north throughout the winter will figure they can go to Seattle for less than it would cost them to remain at home. A lot of them, once there will extend their stay and money that would otherwise be spent here at home will eventually go into the pockets of the Seattleites.

The Humboldt has given good service; it made a living freight rate and has maintained it and there should be but little surprise expressed if the independent and small shippers announce their intention to stand with the Humboldt management, despite the cut that has been announced. Really, it should not be unexpected, if taken in connection with the manner in which the White Pass Railroad company has treated the Humboldt the fight that has been started would result in a boomerang. —Juneau Record.

The truth of the above was shown Sunday evening when the Dolphin arrived from the north with every berth occupied. It behooves the people of the district to stand pat on the Humboldt if they hope for fair treatment in the future.

Thus far five newspapers in Alaska have refused to endorse the Wickersham territorial government bill, and they represent diversified interests in different sections of the district, and are as follows: Miners' Union Bulletin of Fairbanks; Daily Record, Juneau; Industrial Mine Worker, Nome; Sentinel, Wrangell; Daily Alaskan Cordova. —Cordova Alaska.

Fred Leonard is having a new roof put on his residence.

A Monster Undertaking

The sale of the Alaska Central railroad to a syndicate headed by George W. Perkins, which includes J. P. Morgan of New York and Charles G. Dawes of Chicago, marks the end of a long period of litigation, and makes possible the completion of a railroad which will mean the opening of one of the richest mining and agricultural sections of Alaska. The road has already been completed for 72 miles, extending from Seward north beyond Turnagain arm, and construction contracts are soon to be signed for the extension of the line up the rich Susitna valley to a junction with the Tanana river near Fairbanks, 425 miles to the northward. Another branch is contemplated from Knik through the Yenitna and Kuskokwim to Nulato or Kaltak on the Yukon. This would give the Alaska Central a system approximately 1,200 miles long. —Mining World.

A Very Pleasant Party

A jolly crowd gathered at the Wrangell Hotel Saturday evening to participate in a basket party. The ladies present had prepared baskets of delicious lunch, which auctioned off to the highest bidders, some of them bringing a good figure. Dancing was the main feature of the evening and everybody had a fine time.

R. D. Pinneo, general freight and passenger agent of the Pacific Coast Steamship company, is making a business tour of the different towns of Southeastern Alaska.

"Silver Tip" Slyster, the hardware man, has been gathering in the orders for his house from local merchants this week.

The launch Gussie L. with the Leonard-Royalty logging company on board, made port this week and has since been tied up at the local float.

"Pat" is in receipt of the news that Mrs. Patenaude will start for home this week, making several stops on the way, and will arrive in Wrangell about the end of the month.

Spring Salmon are becoming more plentiful in this neighborhood and several good catches are reported. Tom Tamaree reports catching two the other morning in less than half an hour.

Rev. Corser returned from his trip to Skagway on the Jefferson.

OH, YOU KID!

She dropped her glove,
He raised his lid,
And picked it up—
With "Oh, you kid,"
"How dare you sir?"
He smiled at her—
"Excuse me, miss—
It's just like this—
I meant the glove."

Here And There In The North

Severe storms at Nome did much damage to shipping last month.

Frank Kole, a miner and prospector, is reported lost in the mountains near Sumdum.

Three cases of chicken pox have broken out among the children in the public school at Skagway.

The lawyer's fees asked in the final settlement of the receivership of the Alaska Central railroad amounted to $70,000.

Application has been made for a customs officer at Pleasant Camp, says the Haines Press, but the time of his appointment has not been set.

It is reported that the recent grand jury at Valdez included several persons who were not citizens and one who was under age.

A trail running 600 miles into the interior from Seward, furnishing an inlet to the new Iditarod country, is a probability for early construction next year.

Under the direction of Major W. P. Richardson, 600 miles of trail in the interior have been flagged and otherwise marked to prevent obliteration by the snow.

Bishop P. T. Rowe will spend the winter in the east raising funds to advance missionary work in Alaska. He will not return to Alaska until march, when he will visit Fairbanks and the Koyukuk.

The Northern Navigation company has five of its river fleet frozen in between Burches and Fairbanks, but with a single exception the vessels were handling little passenger business when caught by low water and ice.

During six months in Alaskan waters, the United States coast and geodetic survey steamer Patterson covered an area of 4,400 square miles in Prince William sound, and closely traversed and sounded the waters of Controller bay.

Dr. Harlen Updegraff, chief of the Alaska department of education, has tendered his resignation and will go to Washington, D. C. as collector and compiler of statistics in the bureau of education. W. T. Lopp, superintendent of the northern division, will succeed Dr. Updegraff.

Smith gazed at him without any trace of offense, but with a look of pain in his eyes.

"I'm sorry you said that, Joe," he answered in his slow, quiet voice. "Yes, I know Emma's your wife and that she chose you after I asked her to be mine, and it is just because I do know that that I don't want you to go wrong, and for just that same reason I want you to understand that if you ever get into a tight hole you can gamble on me for help, and I—I ain't always been a spendthrift. Good night!"

"You're not going, then?" inquired Brooks as his friend moved toward the hall, but there was nothing in the tone of the query designed to encourage the great hearted fellow to accompany them.

"No; you two had better go together," he replied as he passed out.

When he had gone Brooks drew quickly from the inside pocket of his waistcoat the pocketbook containing the collections in checks and bills that he had not had time to turn in to the company, extracted a bill of $10 and returned the wad to its hiding place.

Emma emerged from the bedroom with her hat and jacket on.

"Why, where's Jimmy?" she asked.

"He went home. He said he guessed he'd better not come, as he wanted to get up early, or something or other," lied Brooks.

"I wonder why he changed his mind so suddenly," she said.

It was 9 o'clock when they found themselves in the street, and Brooks decided on a vaudeville show as being the only possible place of entertainment they could go to at that hour. It had been so long since they had permitted themselves the extravagance of a night out that Mrs. Brooks enjoyed the change to the full. Watching the actors and laughing at their jokes and antics, she forgot for the time her worries, and the painful impression of the early evening was completely dispelled. As the performance progressed Brooks also underwent a change of mood, and by the time the curtain fell he had softened to something of his old self and was tender and attentive.

When they found themselves outside again she was for going straight home.

"No," he said gayly, squeezing her arm that she had passed under his and patting her hand affectionately; "we are out for a good time for once, and we're going to have it."

She demurred feebly, wanting to go, but feeling that scruple on the ground of expense which, from the necessity of exercising strict and unrelenting economy, entered into all her household expenditures, but he brushed aside her cautious calculations, and when they were seated in a restaurant of quite imposing aspect, and he was ordering broiled lobsters and wine with the air of a man to whom money was no object. He was in rare high spirits and gallant with a tenderness he had not manifested toward her in many a moon. He chattered and chattered, and his animation communicated itself to her, so that her eyes sparkled, her pretty face was wreathed in happy smiles, and she returned his glances of love and admiration as in the happy days of their early married life, when they were all in all to each other and there was none so handsome and so noble minded as he in all the world.

CHAPTER VII.

SOMETHING untoward was happening or impending at the extensive piers and docks of the Latin-American Steamship company on South street, Manhattan. This had been evident from an early hour, for when as whistle sounding time approached the workmen trooped toward the docks and warehouses to begin their daily toll they found groups of policemen stationed about the approaches to the Latin-American line's property. On the faces of the men who entered its gates was an expression of expectancy and determination.

The earliest man to arrive saw the tall, gaunt form of Mr. Smith, the superintendent, standing at the door of the office building. He had been working hard while they slept, but there was no evidence of his all night labor upon his cheerful visage, nor was any sign of anxiety or of the knowledge that any unusual situation had arisen discernible in his phlegmatic demeanor. He appeared to be enjoying the morning air and his cigar without a care in the world. His presence there at that hour was the only indication that he expected trouble. He had not allowed one policeman to remain within the gates. Hardly a man passed in but saluted him verbally or with a touch of the hat, and not a salute was given without being acknowledged. To some he responded with a genial smile and a "Hello, Tom!" or "Howdy, Bill!"

When they had started their work, which was to be stopped completely at 10 o'clock, he vanished upstairs, nor was he seen again until the hands of the clock approached that hour and the strike leaders began to go among the restless men. Then he sauntered out, ordered work stopped, and mounting a crate of merchandise, assembled the men about him.

"You boys," he said in his slow, distinct voice, "have made up your minds to quit at 10 o'clock because somebody told you you ought to be getting more pay and a raise was refused. Well, this is a free country, and every man's right to sell his labor where he likes and at what price he likes is guaranteed him by the constitution. If you want to walk out of here you are free to do so, but if you take my advice—"

"See here," interrupted one of the leaders roughly, pushing to the front, "we ain't askin' no advice from you nor no one else. What we want is money. Do we get that raise or don't we? If we do, all right; if we don't, we quit here and now, and that's all there is to it."

A murmur of approval greeted this ultimatum.

"No," answered the superintendent. "I ain't going to leave you in doubt about it for a minute. You don't get it."

"Then shut up!" ordered the man. "We ain't goin' to lose our time listenin' to no cheap talk. We've voted to quit and all talk is off."

"All right," retorted Smith. "Consider you've all quit. Now, that being the case, you have heaps of time on your hands and are likely to have for an indefinite period unless you have provided jobs for yourselves in anticipation of this. I've got something I'd like to say to you. Those who don't want to hear me don't have to. As I said, this is a free country."

"Go ahead, Jimmy!" cried a voice in the crowd. "You're all right! You've always given us a square deal."

"I hope so," he replied, "and one square deal deserves another."

"Aw, come on, fellows!" admonished the leader. "We're not kids. A strike's a strike. This ain't no debatin' bee, and we don't belong to no mutual admiration society."

Some of the men turned away, but others voiced the view that a hearing ought to be given to the superintendent since he wished to speak to them, and, seeing that their fellows remained, the others soon returned.

"I haven't got a lot to say, and I'm no preacher," he continued. "What I want to give you is not a lecture on what you've got to do—that's your business—but an explanation in your interest. I want to tell you things other people haven't told you and, that you evidently don't know. Please let me get through, then you do as you like. I don't have to tell you that the rate of pay is governed, like everything else, by the law of supply and demand. What is the situation today? We have had rush work for several weeks, and the docks here and all along the water front are choked up with freight. But back of this, although you may not know it, the rail-

"I put it up to you, and you've made good."

roads everywhere are laying off freight cars, mills are laying off men, and signs point to a serious slump in business all over the country, which will reach here soon. The indications are that in the natural course of things during the coming winter there won't be work for more than half of you and that you'll need badly all the spare coin you can save now. Yet you chose this very time to demand an increase from the company and give it eighteen hours' notice, including twelve nonworking hours, in which to think it over. I don't call that a square deal, whatever you may think about it. Now, the country towns are full of men anxious to get jobs, and the company, notwithstanding the short notice, is fully prepared for a strike. In that shed yonder are 3,000 cots, put there during last night, and provision has been made to feed 3,000 men for several days. Captain Williams!"

An outburst of curses and yells greeted this mention of the president's name, with cries of "We know Williams!"

"Captain Williams," went on the superintendent calmly, "says that any man who goes out on strike now will never enter the employ of the line again in this or any other port. And I'll see personally to it that he doesn't. This man here said a strike had been decided on, but anybody who wants to stay and work instead of making a fool of himself by quitting will be taken care of, I'll promise that. That's all. It's up to you."

Amid dead silence he got down from the crate and returned to his office.

The men remained assembled for consultation, and in the crowd were many doubtful faces. It was clear that Smith's calm, drawled harangue had made a profound impression. Just as in private life he attracted the warmest friendships, so in business, to which he gave strict and intelligent attention, he earned the respect of all with whom he had to deal.

The strike leader mounted the crate and, amid the applause of the hot headed and discontented, delivered himself of a fierce denunciation of the company as a greedy, grasping, oppressive corporation and of its dock superintendent as a "four flusher" and a dispenser of "con" talk, meaning thereby of words intended to deceive. But there were too many who knew that Smith was neither.

"For my part," one of the laborers said, "I've got a wife and six kids, the eldest of which is nine. I move that we take another vote on this here strike."

The motion was adopted with acclamation. The result of the ballot was overwhelmingly in favor of remaining at work.

While delegates appointed to inform the superintendent that there would be no turnout were waiting upon him in his office, the other men passed the shed indicated by Smith, pushed open the door and gazed in, while others crowded up behind them. Arranged all around the vast space were neat, white cots, and in the center were long tables and benches.

"Say," remarked one of the men. "Jimmy Smith ain't no bluff, is he? For a slow speakin' and movin' man he's the liveliest hustler I ever seen."

Half an hour later Smith once more lowered himself into the chair beside the president's desk.

"Well," said Captain Williams gruffly, "I understand the strike's off."

"Yep," was the reply.

"How did you do it?"

"Told 'em the truth."

The captain regarded him from under his bushy eyebrows, brought together in his usual frown.

"I guess you don't often lie, Smith."

"Not more than I have to."

"What preparations had you made for trouble?"

"Three thousand hired army cots in No. 2 shed, with tables and benches. Then there's these."

He laid before the president a number of bids for supplying rations three times a day to from 500 to 3,000 men and telegrams from various towns worded something to this effect:

On terms offered can ship 200 men within forty-eight hours.

Williams read each paper carefully.

"A strike at this time would have meant heavy loss to the line," he observed.

Smith nodded.

Then the captain gave utterance to the highest compliment he had ever made to a man in his life.

"I put it up to you," he said, "and you've made good. I guessed it was likely you would. Have a cigar."

Everybody in Wrangell knows that the town owns a good many fire extinguishers, which are scattered around town where they would be the most get-at-able in case of need, but as few people seem to know just where the extinguishers are located, The Sentinel publishes the following statement of where they can be found:

Electric Light Plant, Wm. Lewis' residence, St. Michael Trading Co.'s store, Ed. Linderman's residence, Frank Goodrich's residence, J. E. Worden's residence and J. C. Ensley's residence. Besides these the wheeled extinguishers are located at the Wrangell Hotel and Grief's saloon.

Wiser And Wetter Now

Capt. Kidd is in the lime light again, this time, not on account of the loss of a lantern, but by taking a header into the "chuck" in the darkest hour of the night. He was going home the other night with a package of sugar under one arm and divers other groceries under the other. Down the slip he went, to Johnston's float. It was dark for that "fellar" hadn't brought back the captain's lantern. Cautiously he made his way along to the place where he thought the foot plank was which went over to his boat. Down came his foot, but no plank was there, and captain, sugar, coffee and all went headfirst into the drink. The rest can be imagined. The captian fished himself out, but the groceries went to feed the fishes, and now, once more he "bane lukin' for der feller wid his lantern."

Harry James is nursing a very sore foot these days. While at work he jumped down from a step ladder, lighting on a rusty nail, which pierced the shoe and entered the foot.
